2. RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

This research adopts a mixed-method approach, combining quantitative surveys with qualitative interviews to provide a holistic understanding of consumer behavior. The methodology is outlined as follows:

Research Design: A descriptive research design was chosen to systematically study consumer preferences and market trends.

Data Collection Methods:

1. Primary Data:

- Online surveys were conducted with 300 respondents, focusing on demographics, content preferences, and format preferences (print vs. digital).
- In-depth interviews with 20 regular readers of Outlook publications provided qualitative insights.

2. Secondary Data:

- Analysis of industry reports and academic literature on consumer behavior in the publishing sector.

Sampling: A stratified sampling method ensured representation across age groups, genders, and geographic locations, with a focus on urban and semi-urban readers.

Data Analysis Techniques: Quantitative data were analyzed using descriptive statistics, while qualitative data were examined through thematic analysis.

3. FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION

1. Demographic Insights:

- The primary readership comprises educated professionals aged 25-45, with an equal gender distribution.
- Urban readers showed a higher inclination towards digital magazines, while semi-urban readers displayed a preference for print formats.

2. Content Preferences:

- Readers prioritized content on current affairs (42%), lifestyle (30%), and entertainment (20%).
- Specialized topics such as technology and health are gaining traction, particularly among younger audiences.

3. Print vs. Digital Consumption:

- While 65% of respondents preferred digital formats for convenience, 35% expressed loyalty to print magazines due to their tactile and distraction-free experience.
- Digital magazines were favored for features such as multimedia content and real-time updates.

- Monthly subscriptions were the most popular purchasing model, with 60% of subscribers opting for this format.
